The most common form this takes is the various benefits you may be eligible to apply for. The major benefit many people claim now is Universal Credit, but there are others like carer allowance you may be able to claim as well. While you could handle all this alone, it is worth considering using benefit & Universal Credit advisory services to help.

BUT WHY IS THIS?

EXPERT GUIDANCE

The UK benefit system can be a complex place and something that is not always easy to understand. This is especially true if you have never claimed benefits or Universal Credit before. Each benefit you may be able to apply for will usually come with its own rules and evidence requirements, for example. This alone can seem overwhelming to many people.

When you also factor in that it's not always easy to work out which benefits you could claim, then handling it all alone can soon get daunting. Using benefit & Universal Credit advisory services allows the experts to help you through the process and apply for the right benefits correctly.

LESS HASSLE

Using this kind of service is also just a lot easier than having to handle it on your own. It gives you someone else to bounce ideas off and another party to lend a hand when needed. It also simply gives you the reassurance that you have someone else in your corner and that you are not doing it solo. All this together will make you feel more relaxed about applying for benefits and make the whole process less stressful.

SOMEONE TO HELP CONTEST DECISIONS

One major bone of contention for some when applying for benefits is incorrect decisions. This can see a perfectly good claim rejected in error for example and leave you without the financial support you desperately need. Trying to contest decisions that you believe are incorrect on your own is not easy. You first have to know what evidence is required, who to speak too and how to go about it. A Universal Credit and benefits advice service is handy here because it provides help with getting paperwork ready for the independent tribunal investigating the decision.
