CAN ACCOUNTANTS HANDLE PROBATE AND INSOLVENCY SERVICES?

If you need probate and insolvency services, you may be surprised to know that an accountant could be the best option, especially one with relevant experience and knowledge of the tax system. In fact, since 2014, qualified chartered accountants can be licensed to offer probate services to their clients as long as they are registered with the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales. When it comes to insolvency, probate and other complicated matters, having an experienced accountant on your side can be a huge relief.

ACCOUNTING SERVICES FOR INSOLVENCY PROCEEDINGS

If you are going through the insolvency process, having a qualified accountant with expertise in the area can be a great help, from offering tax advice to helping to put a restructure in place. Whether you are trying to sell a business quickly after unforeseen circumstances or you need specialist advice from an experienced accountant, it's important to do your research and find a company you can trust, like Taxcare Accountancy. Insolvencies can affect businesses across the board, from small startups to long-established multinationals, so it's a good idea to ask a potential accountant about the previous cases they have handled to make sure they are experienced in your area.

FINDING THE RIGHT ACCOUNTANT

Because of the complicated and sensitive nature of probate and insolvency matters, you'll need to find an accountant you can trust, with relevant experience and the correct qualifications. It's a good idea to get in touch with an initial phone call or email and make sure they have the skills needed to make sure everything goes smoothly. Your accountant will be able to guide you through the whole process, from handling admin to liaising with HMRC. Look for an accountancy firm with experience in complex multi-stakeholder and multi-jurisdictional restructurings so no matter what circumstances you are in, they can help.
